PARISIAN BOHEMIA IS MONTPARNASSE

Seekers After Art and Freedom Desert Montmartre For New Haunt.

(Special Cable to The Washington Herald and Chicago Tribune.)

PARIS, Oct. 1.—Bohemia in Paris has deserted Montmartre, where it formerly reigned, and has gone to Montparnasse. The quarter now frequented by the student painters, the district of the real artistic cabaret, the literary cafes, lies between the Avenue de l'Observatoire and the Rue de Rennes. The Luxembourg instead of the Butte de Montmartre has become the art center of Paris, and in the streets and places around it will be found the disciples of Apollinaire.

Montparnasse is a tower of Babel.
On the terraces of the cafes lying between the Rotonde and the Closerie des Lilas can be found the Bohemian exiles of all nations: the Frenchman, with his long hair, his close fitting turtleneck, and his American, clean shaven and punc-tillious; the talkative Greek, the Scandinavian pupils of Raymond Duncan, the bespectacled Slav, and the Italian model with a face like a madonna. It is the melting pot of the artistic of the races.

In the evenings you can hear on almost any of the cafe terraces those who recite their verses over a glass of vermouth or something which costs less.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—"England is is the social revolution." The wizen faced, undersized, bushy-haired little man standing on a soap box waves his fist in the general direction of Buckingham palace. But the little crowd, standing at the Haymarket road corner of Hyde Park remains calm, unin-ingmen, red faced, well fed, and quite contented, they look upon the Bolshevik agitator as a sort of free vaudeville performer.

He is a regular fixture of their Sunday afternoon walk. He can be found here, near the Marble arch, every Sunday. And the fact that the tall blue clad policeman standing nearby only smiles at his speeches shows that the English government has adopted a subtle and successful way of dealing with radicals. They let them talk. They encourage them to talk.

Many years ago England found that radicals insisted on talking.
